Nursing Homes Oakville - A skilled nursing facility is a place where individuals have the choice to live when they are no longer able to perform their every day activities. This decrease in function may be temporary or long term. Depending upon the individual's needs, staff will be able to assist patients with numerous tasks like for example eating, taking a bath, grooming, and going to the bathroom. The rooms could be designed similar to a hospital setting, with some private rooms and several shared rooms. Bathrooms could also be private or shared.

A skilled nursing facility is more frequently called a nursing home. This is due to the fact that nurses carry the majority of the workload in these facilities. All of the nurses within a nursing home facility would have various degrees of certification and different specialties. Nurses would directly speak with the physicians of the patient and other members of the healthcare team in order to guarantee correct patient care. Nursing facilities offer around the clock care to those patients whose requirements are severe enough that they require constant monitoring, but not severe enough to require hospitalization. If necessary, the patient's physician may go to the nursing facility.

Because of the huge number of elderly individuals in skilled nursing homes, these facilities are often referred to as old folks homes. Then again, in more recent years, new services such as rehabilitation have been added to numerous facilities. Often, someone who has just undergone an operation, like for instance a hip or knee replacement, would stay in a skilled nursing facility for several months or weeks, depending on the needs of their rehabilitation. Major surgeries, such as joint replacements, would be very hard for most individuals to care for at home, specially if they live alone. A skilled nursing facility offers physical therapy and 24 hour care in a location which is safe and is intended to house individuals with disabilities.
